Reporting is not opinionated

Editorial

As members of the press, our intention is to report the truth. We are here to examine facts and present possibilities. It is not the nature of the press to interpret facts or attempt to present biased information.

Members of the press have been viewed as vultures, circling a scene ready to pluck at any situation and fill the newspaper or broadcast it. It is a nomenclature caused by some reporters using less professional ethics to present stories. It is not, however, the norm.

At times, there are stories presented in the paper that our readers construe as biased or one sided. We, as members of this organization of informers, should not, and in most cases do not, write stories with the intention of showing only one side of a story. But when the "other side of the story" is held by those who do not talk to press, it appears that way.

An accident involving a student who was driving and a pedestrian student on TJC campus, was immediately covered by members of the Apache Pow Wow news team. Onlookers, some of which were friends of one of the persons involved, berated and wouldn't speak with reporters.

These types of stressful situations can bring more bias toward the media. However, it must be understood that news in all its forms must be recorded as quickly as possible to avoid the degradation of truth that can sometimes occur with time.

Every source of information will be used to try and report events accurately, from police reports to nearby cameras. When eye witnesses tell their side of things, it only helps to increase accuracy.

This recent incident isn't just about one student who hit a pedestrian. It's about how bad the driver feels, what might have been done to avoid it, how hurt the pedestrian is, why did it happen and maybe it will shine a light on a potential safety issue at that location that needs a solution.

The media is here to inform, but we need help from our readers. We can only print or broadcast when we're informed. In any situation where a news reporter is covering a story, we need people to talk to us.

When we share a story, there is a section in each paper called "Letter to the editor." This gives our readers the chance to share their opposing or even agreeable viewpoints on any given story. It also gives the option of simply sharing their own nuggets of wisdom to everyone else. To send a letter to the editor, email us at tjcnews@tjc.edu.

Sometimes a break is the smartest decision

Column

Most people are strongly against taking a year off because they have always been told it's a bad idea. Everyone believes that if you take a year off, the motivation to return to school will just disappear and all of the time, effort and money will have been wasted. Students grind away semester after semester and don't realize that, because they came to a junior college first, taking a year off is not a bad idea.

You can earn an associate's degree at a junior college like TJC. An associate's degree is my idea of a ticket to a year's vacation. It's a huge pause button on all of your hard work, because, unlike credit hours, you don't have to worry about losing some of it in transfer. So why not hit the button? Why not take this unique opportunity that you have given yourself? Take some time to breathe and think before spending thousands more dollars on the next step.

A year off can be several different things and used to your advantage. It can be the light at the end of the tunnel for those unsure what they are doing or a reward for the students who have given it a 110 percent and are tired.

Most people come straight to college after high school and school is all they really know. I can personally say that I'm tired. I took school through summer this past year and never really got that long break that a student is expected after an academic year.

All that school exhaustion just built up and, by this semester, my motivation was gone. Those breaks are a chance for you to evaluate yourself, go over how you did and determine how to improve and move forward.

Taking a year off can also be really beneficial financially. Going to work and school is hard, especially if you are going full time for both, but if you take a year off, you can really work full time or even two jobs and take some time to save up money. Generally after a junior college, most people transfer to a four-year university and the price difference is obvious. Most people in college have to worry about student debt, but by taking a little time to gather up a small savings, the debt you gather doesn't have to be so drastic.

Aside from saving up money, you can also take your time filling out the transfer paperwork and scholarship applications. Trying to take care of everything while trying to achieve your degree can leave you a little short on time, but if you have a year, you have extra time that might make the difference between success and a waste of time. This reduced stress will also give you more time to focus on classes while you are still in school and help your grades in the long run.

Aside from all the logical reasons, there are also some reasons you should just do it for yourself. I went to a journalism convention last spring and one of the workshops I attended was

Redshirt program may not be worth it

Column

Though the Tyler Junior College redshirt program looks promising, there is more than meets the eye when it comes to their so-called program. Some say TJC gives off false hope with its "redshirt program."

"I'm on the team, I don't know anything about the tryouts," said freshman forward Andre Brooks.

The redshirt program is a class where, theoretically, players would workout, build strength and IQ and become familiar with the team's play. Instead, the program or class, which would be more appreciated for the matter only, does a few drills for 50 minutes then each student is free to go, leaving very little time for any type of impression to be made on a coach.

"It's a long shot but it is a shot," said athletic director Tim Drain.

While kids are signing up every fall for the redshirt program, paying the registration fee to be in the class, nobody is giving them a real look to get on the team as the players are already selected and placed on the team months in advance. The players don't go through the redshirt class or tryouts.

Players here have no interaction with the redshirt program attendees, due to either lack of skill or because of they are given an unfair shot just so the men's basketball program will continue to not only get their money for the class, but an additional 20 dollars just to try out.

about taking care of your self emotionally. The speaker talked about some articles she had done that included rape, child abuse and many more disturbing topics. When writing an article, you have to immerse yourself in the details and surround yourself in everything. Having those grim stories surrounding you regularly can quickly weigh you down. She had to learn when enough was enough and walk away from certain topics for a while to gather herself. This applies to college because it is such an emotionally draining time in our lives and sometimes we just need to walk away and gather ourselves to return and finish stronger.

This is also an amazing opportunity to get to know yourself. Some of us are in a very unique time in our lives in that we don't have extremely serious jobs, we aren't married or, in some cases, not even in relationships and we don't have kids. There is no reason not to just pack a bag and go. I could easily pack all of my things and move to College Station, Austin or even California. There won't be another time in your life when you can just pack up a car and go, like there is right now. You don't have to stay forever; it could only be for six months but Even at the tryouts, potential players don't understand what is going on.

"We didn't get to warm-up or anything, they just threw a ball out there and we just played a game. It was just a pickup game. They didn't tell us the score we were going to, they just said they were going to watch us. They weren't specific in any way," said said Aaron Wooten, a non-TJC student who tried out.

There isn't a coach that can get anything from only looking at pickup games for three hours on a Saturday afternoon. And with hundreds of kids coming to such an open tryout every year by TJC, one would think there would be a more precise way to obtain players if the coaching staff was really looking to add talent to the roster.

"No, they didn't say a word. I literally walked up to him, coach Edwards, and 'he said y'all done why not go? Go before you have house payments and kids and obligations that tie you to one place.

Part of leaving high school was this excitement that anything was possible and life was finally ours for the taking, but it took a minute to get our footing and, now that we're standing, it still is. Go, take your life and just have a year or six months that you really live. It doesn't have to be backpacking across Europe, but why not take a 3-day weekend to see the Grand Canyon, or get on a train to go up North for a night or finally go barhopping on Sixth Street.

Everyone can say it is a bad idea and that if you take a year off you'll never come back, but you know how much you have already invested in college and I say you should take some time to invest in yourself. Take a year off to get to know yourself, be selfish, be reckless and have something to think back fondly on when you're up till midnight in two years, studying for a big test. Breaks are good, just consider it a little power nap in life.

Saying goodbye to TJC harder than it seems

Dear Editor,

When I first came to TJC, I didn't want to get involved with anything. I wasn't exactly kind and making friends wasn't very fun. Nothing was better than going to class and going home, without saying a word to anyone. Why would I want to get attached to a place that I will end up leaving?

After two years, I realized how wrong I was. I never thought I would learn as much as I did here. Now I'm getting ready to move to Alabama to finish my education and start a new adventure. I often wonder what my future will be like.

Will I be successful?

I guess it depends on my definition of success.

At first, I was excited to know that I was getting closer to moving to one of my favorite places in the world. Not very many people would admit that about Alabama. I assume it will be a very bittersweet moment.

What will happen to all of my friends that I've made at TJC? I'd hate to think that I'll never see them again.

People keep telling me that everything will be fine. Sometimes, I believe them. Other times, I just think it's false hope. I keep hearing people who have graduated from good schools say college is pointless and it's hard for them to find jobs. Is that really true? I like to think it depends on the major.

I guess I'll just have to take the leap and find out for myself.

Out-of-district students soon to pay a higher surcharge

By Haley Schukei
Staff Writer

Out-of-district students will be paying more to attend TJC this fall after the Board of Trustees voted to increase the out-of-district surcharge fee.

At the board meeting on March 31, TJC President, Dr. Mike Metke addressed the consideration of tuition and fees for Fall 2016.

"The out-of-district surcharge is well below where it should be in order for these students to pay their fair share. We tried to hold back as much as possible for our students, but the state has reduced funding over time, and next year appears to be very gloomy with unemployment in Texas up and both oil prices and sales tax revenues down," said Metke. "We are worried the state will be issuing significant cuts and community colleges, which already we're underfunded, will be very hard pressed to fulfill our mission."

The out-of-district surcharge fee is assessed to the students who live outside of TJC's taxing district, meaning their families do not pay TJC property taxes.

"It is a relatively modest, user-specific, increase of $5 per semester credit hour," said Metke.

The increase to non-resident tuition in the spring was based on the out-of-state residency of the student. Tuition increased $3 per semester credit hour and accumulated a little over $20,000 additional tuition revenue.

"During the budget process, many variables are reviewed that impact the institution as a whole and the various departments and programs individually, as well as any local, state or federal mandates."

-Sarah Van Cleef

Vice President of Financial and Administrative Affairs

Non-resident students live outside of Texas and include international students. Non-resident students pay a higher tuition rate of $53 per semester credit hour versus the $30 per semester credit hour that out-of-district students pay.

The projected revenue to be collected from the out-of-district increase is approximately $540,000 for the entire budget year of Sept. 1, 2016 to Aug. 31, 2017.

"There have been six tuition increases for in-district and out-of-district students since I have been at TJC," said Vice President of Finance and Administrative Affairs Sarah Van Cleef, who has worked here for almost 17 years.

"During the budget process, many variables are reviewed that impact the institution as a whole and the various departments and programs individually, as well as any local, state or federal mandates," said Van Cleef. "Once the review is completed, a recommendation is made to the Board of Trustees for their consideration."

According to Van Cleef, the increases are typically pretty modest and non-frequent.

Over the years, the funding from the state has steadily declined while the student population has increased along with the services offered to students.

TJC Dual Credit helps prepare high school students to get their degrees faster

By Irene Campos
News Editor

High school senior Elizabeth Horton will graduate from Van High School on May 27, having already completed an incredible thirty-one college credits.

Horton has already enrolled in TJC's radiology tech program and will know whether or not she will be accepted by the first of August.

This was all possible because of TJC's Dual Credit program.

"Dual credit is when high school students can take college classes and get both high school and college credit," said Stephanie Mayo, Coordinator of Dual Credit Enrollment. "It works in several different ways. We have students that take classes here on the TJC campus, and we have students that take classes on their high school campus. They must meet with their high school counselor and make sure first that the class they want to take will count for dual credit."

High school students who complete dual credit not only rack up a lot of college credits earlier, but can cut a semester or multiple semesters off their college career. This means they can graduate quicker with less college debt under their belts.

When asked why she wanted to complete dual credit, Horton said, "I chose to enroll in dual credit courses because in essence it gave me a head start, a head start that I knew not everyone would have. I also wanted to better myself, and taking the more difficult college courses helped not only expand my knowledge, but aided in preparing me to be a full time college student."

There's no question that attending college is

George Tefteller molds minds with mathematics for 50 years

By Carl Speaks

Add a love of teaching with charm, patience and respect, then multiply that by fifty years and it will equal George Tefteller, professor of mathematics at TJC.

"I had a degree in math – a master's -- and the other opportunities that involved having a degree in math didn't appeal to me, so I decided to give it [teaching] a try and I liked it. I've been here since 1967," said Tefteller.

The advent of technology, such as the graphing calculator, has made math easier for both the teacher and the student, according to Tefteller. On the other hand, he teaches online classes as well, but prefers the hands-on experience of classroom learning. The biggest advantage is getting questions answered quickly.

He teaches online classes as well, but prefers the hands-on experience of classroom learning. The biggest advantage of which, is that students get questions answered more quickly.

Answering questions is one thing he doesn't have a problem with. Former students on ratemyprofessors.com have great things to say about him.

One student wrote, "He doesn't go over things too fast, will always help if you have a question and gives plenty of examples ... his lectures aren't boring either." Another student wrote, "One of my fav math teachers and I hate math. He is extremely helpful ... he's seriously one of my fav professors at TJC." These are just a couple of the many similar testimonials to his success as a teacher.

Another former student, Lorri Lay, is now a professor of Mathematics at TJC. She said that she had him for Modern Math and remembers him saying, "It's the hardest thing you'll ever completely different than regular high school," said Horton.

For students contemplating whether or not they want to complete dual credit or just go straight in, Horton has a few pro tips for completing dual credit while still in high school:

1) It is like a perfect practice session for college. Learn how college works while also raising high school and college GPAs- if you commit and study, study, study.

2) Dual credit courses are substantially cheaper than a normal college course. So by taking these courses you are saving yourself, and your parents a nice chunk of change.

3) Dual credit truly is the key to being ready to tackle college head on. You get the chance to get your basic core courses out of the way, then you're already ahead of those who are starting with no college credit hours. In any case, having all of my credit hours had made me eligible for my desired program. With good luck, I can enter the program, earn my degree and certifications, then enter the work force prepared and ready to go.

For more information about dual credit, go to Jenkins room 106 and ask for Stephanie Mayo.

"There are limited avenues that the college can pursue to offset the decline in state appropriations," said Van Cleef.

Since the state reimburses based on enrollment, there is hope that at the next legislative session, the state will not cut any more funding than it already has.

"We're working with our legislators, tracking our legislative agenda to tell a better story so that the state could reassess the funding we get so that it doesn't have to be carried by the students," said Dr. Juan Mejia, provost & vice president for Academic and Student Affairs.

Student/Employee Lanyard Policy:

1. Lanyards must be worn around the neck while on campus, and the ID card must be clearly visible at all times, unless it should be removed for safety reasons or an approved ADA variance.
2. Any lanyard is acceptable, but it must be similar in design and worn in the same manner as the official college lanyard. The color of the lanyard is not critical.
3. No one will be allowed into class without wearing his or her ID/lanyard.
4. Students who do not have their ID/Lanyards may pick up a Day Pass at the Campus Safety Office, Campus Safety Substation located at the Rogers Student Center or from a TJC Ambassador. The first Day Pass each semester is free of charge. For all subsequent Day Passes a $5.00 cost recovery charge will be billed to the student's account.
5. Employees may obtain a Day ID/Lanyard from their respective Dean's or Director's office.

Student leaders recognized at 9th annual banquet

Banquet awards outstanding students and faculty members for contributions to the school

Julia Contarelli

Student Life

The 9th annual Student Leadership Banquet, held at the Green Acres Baptist Church on April 21, gathered organizations and recognized students with awards.

"It was really nice that they honored the people that actually put in work at school on the daily stuff," said John Connor Haverkamp, a member of the Sigma Alpha Pi.

The organizations given awards were; Apache Activities Council, Apache Pow Wow, Baptist Student Ministries, Catholic Campus Community, International Education Club, Sigma Alpha Pi, Wesley House and Student Senate.

John Connor was the Vice President for the Sigma Alpha Pi, he resigned his position because of classes and work but, even being a member, he still checked in on the Organization and helped as he could. He got the Leader of the year award.

"It was really nice of them to acknowledge that I did my best while I was there," said John Connor.

Dr. Tim Drain talked about the importance of being an Apache, the value that being part of this college represents and he affirmed more than once that he was proud of everyone in that room.

The Student Leadership Selection Committee consisted of; Allen Arrick, Karen Cooper, David Funk, Nidia Hassan, Jason Knicely, Hazel Mendez and Ryan Taylor.

The pamphlets on each tables had a special thank you to some organizations and people, "A special thank you to: Dr. Juan Mejia, Dr. Tim Drain, Belinda Marks, George Faber & friends, Creative Services, Green Acres Baptist Church, Campus Police, Erica Thurman, Tamika Mccullough and Center for student Life & Involvement Staff ... without all of you, this night would not be possible. A special thank you to those who nominated our students, faculty and staff."

The Glass Recreation Center; not the average gymnasium

Dailon Smith
Staff Writer

Hidden behind numerous trees, in the deep north side of Tyler lies The Glass Recreation Center where lifting weights and running on treadmills is not the only way to burn some unwanted fat.

"The Glass is kind of like a diamond in the rough," said Ann Santana recreational supervisor at The Glass. "People don't know about The Glass a lot because it's in the historical north part of Tyler. When they first conceived the idea, it was a great need for the community. I don't see this as a fitness center, I see it as a community center."

With a full-length basketball court, a lake for fishing and an indoor workout facility, the recreation center is located on W. 32nd St. near Woldert Park in Tyler. The large building was built in the spring of 2001 and now has from 1,500 to 5,000 members, depending on the season. Membership is $30 for Tyler residents $50 for out-of-town residents. Members get access to all of the indoor facilities.

"We try to make [the members] feel welcome when they walk in, by being on a first- name basis with them and really just trying to make them feel at home," said Staci Lara, Glass Recreation Center employee. "We always try to talk to them and ask them their opinion about what type of activities we should offer for them."

The center offers everything from weight rooms to basketball courts and some unusual ways to get active. The Glass hosts events and activities throughout the year for anyone who is interested.

"The Center does a little bit of everything we host events like twilight Easter egg hunt that brings over 1'000 kids each year, as well as, hosting activities like pickleball, American karate, and the Nite Hike," according to Santana.

Pickleball was created in 1965 in Seattle Washington when two dads were baby-sitting their children and needed an activity for them to play. They grabbed paddles and a wiffle ball and headed to the volleyball net where they created the new game, "pickleball". The game is a combination of pingpong, badminton and tennis. Players use a larger sized pingpong paddle, a wiffle ball, and a net that is lowered to the ground.

"When I teach other people how to play the game, I use the technique, 'the kitchen'," said Santana. "It's like when your mom told you to stay out of the kitchen, it's the same concept. You only go into the kitchen if you are trying to get a ball back over the net."

The center hosts pickleball games from 9 a.m. to noon every Tuesday and Thursday. It's free to all members and non-members.

Of the activities that the center hosts, there is the annual "Nite Hike" at the Tyler State Park. The event encourages families to strap on their best walking shoes and bring a flashlight for an

Anyone who is a music major or was once in their high school band, should look into joining the Tyler Junior College Apache Band. There are currently 175 students in the Apache Band and there is no limit on how many can join.

Freshmen can go on to the TJC website and click on the Apache Band, where there are two forms to fill out.

The two forms are an information request form and band director recommendation form. Once the

TJC president faced death while stranded at sea

Lost in the ocean, Metke fought with sharks and faced hypothermia

Haley Schukei
Staff Writer

Diving into the ocean on a routine spearfishing trip, Dr. Mike Metke, TJC's president, had no idea he would be using that spear to fight off sharks while stranded at sea for nearly 30 hours.

On Saturday morning, June 20, 1987, Metke, at-the-time president of the scuba diving club in the Rio Grande Valley, along with a few friends, set out on a spearfishing adventure.

"Sometimes I ask myself, if I only had a short time to live, is this how I'd spend it? All of us are really short-timers in the grand scheme of things," said Metke. "That experience from 20 years ago was intense enough to forever etch some lessons in my mind."

Fully aware of the harsh weather conditions, Metke refused to waste the time he spent travelling to the oil platforms, where he would be fishing and dove in anyway.

"When you've gone out 20 miles on a boat and you've spent hours getting there, it's really hard to say 'you know what, I don't think I'm going to go today,'" said Metke.

Metke decided to take a chance that nearly ended his life. He helped the other two divers get in first and made sure they were safe. Once they went under water, Metke dived in.

The two other divers later admitted that they never were able to let go of the rig and actually spear fish. They couldn't let go because the current was so strong.

Once Metke dived in, he was separated from the others, again, because of the strong currents.

On the other side of the world, Metke's wife, Donna, and daughter, Jennifer, were in Vienna as part of a European study group. Donna was awakened at 2 a.m. and informed that her husband had gone scuba diving and was missing at sea. She quickly made arrangements for another teacher to take over the group of students she was leading and left immediately with Jennifer for the airport.

Somewhere in the Gulf of Mexico, Metke was fighting off a 5-foot tiger shark. A small amount of blood from an injury on his toes kept the shark interested for hours, even as Metke jabbed at it with the spear point from his fishing shaft.

"By the time the shark gave up, hours later, it was getting dark and I was still far from shore," said Metke, in an article written in 2007, posted on nwnnews.com.

As Donna and Jennifer flew across the Atlantic, they were cold, crying and shaking underneath a pile of blankets on the airplane and ruining an otherwise pleasant flight for their fellow passengers.

Metke began to realize that hypothermia was setting in.

"I would need to cover over 40 miles, and short of more shark attacks, hypothermia would become my biggest threat to survival," Metke said. "Because I had planned to go for a short dive, I hadn't worn my wetsuit. The eight- to 10-foot waves felt like ice as they pounded over the top of me, and I continually had to spit water out through my snorkel. My mouth grew full of sores from the rubbing of the mouthpiece. Shivering gave way to the hypothermia and intermittent hallucinations."

It was the middle of the night and he had been in the

Family Learning Center as a tool for TJC Early Education students

Emily Attebery
Managing Editor

"Look Mommy, watch me!" yelled one little girl bobbing back and forth on a green frog spring seat, running around her are countless other toddling children. Colorful decorations and nearly a hundred people chatting and laughing fill the Family Learning Center of Tyler's playground for their annual picnic. This is one event the FLC uses as a family fun occasion for their children, families, students and workers. The FLC has been a tool for TJC's Early Education students since 2007 and has been a place of learning for the young children who attend.

Fifteen years ago, before the FLC existed, Lynn Sitton came to TJC and noticed it did not have an open lab class for the early education degree. She knew of other schools with education labs and understood the importance of having one. Six years later, Sitton founded the FLC. She realized what makes it special for TJC is the fact that they did not have one before.

However, Sitton says that "I don't like to take credit for that."

The FLC partners with TJC, TISD and the Literacy Council. All of the employees that work at the FLC are also TJC employees. Children who attend the center come from different backgrounds and places -- their ages range from 6 months to Pre-K.

"We have a lot of students that their parents are teachers at Tyler ISD or All Saints or over at TJC. Anybody can come here," said Carrol McGlaun the FLC Director.

The children are taught "active play" according to McGlaun, where they are exposed to items, toys and lessons that help "build their brains to learn, their bodies to learn, social skills and communication skills" because "you don't start learning in Kindergarten, you start learning before you're born."

Lessons and toys alternate. They could be learning about dinosaurs one moment and camping the next.

Wendy Duncan, Senior Project Coordinator of Facilities and Construction at TJC, said the FLC has been very beneficial for her 4-year-old daughter, Alexis.

"They put good education and social skills in the kids so that when they come out, wherever they're going from the Family Learning Center that they have that foundation of having had a really good experience in the world," said Duncan.

Duncan said that another likable trait the FLC possesses is the class size, large enough to have diverse interaction, yet small enough that each child is treated as an individual.

According to McGlaun, "We're a quality daycare, our children always come first."

The FLC does not only work as a daycare, it is also a lab class for those involved in the Early Education degree at TJC. An education lab class is similar to one for Biology or Chemistry, where students get hands-on experience at what they're taught in class.

"If you're in the classroom and you're listening to what you're being taught, it doesn't register until you actually see it. They can tell you this, kids are going to do this or do that, and this is developmentally appropriate or whatever, but until you see it, you're like 'what does that look like?'" said Heather Tennison TJC student who has taught at the FLC for 4 years.

TJC student Sharunda Casel, who has taught at the FLC since 2015, says that she was, at first, nervous about working there, but once she interacted with the kids and they got use to her, it's become a great experience.

TJC student Reshontia Mayfield, who has taught at the FLC since 2014 feels like people become part of a family there, and everyone is willing to help. She said she loves working with the kids.

"They even ask for you when you're not here. They ask 'where's miss so-and-so?'" said Mayfield.

"The environment – it's so family oriented, and when you walk through the doors you can just feel the love. It's so soothing."

*-Sharunda Casel
TJC student, teaches in FLC since 2015*

Casel and Mayfield believe that they've learned values, flexibility, always put the children first, have patience with them and always be there for them. The lessons and advice they've received from Mrs. Sitton, Mrs. McGlaun and everyone who works at the FLC, they say are loving and caring people to model after.

The daycare is open for anyone who would like to place their child there. Prices range from $125 a week for the older children, $135 a week for 6 weeks to 18months old.

"Their doors are always open."

*-Reshontia Mayfield
TJC student, teaches in FLC since 2014*

There is also a $150 enrollment fee and waiting list which can hold up to two years.

Mrs. McGlaun said there have even been people known to make a spot on the waiting list before they were pregnant. They also suggest parents tour the facility before making a decision to place their child there.

TJC men's tennis team ranked number three in the nation

By Autumn Avina
Staff Writer

Tyler Junior College Men's tennis team are recognized for their outstanding performance they had in their tournament in San Antonio. Being ranked number 3 in the nation Player Ciro Lampasas explains the team's struggles for this season, while having young players.

"We previously played the #1-#2 team in the country losing to them both 5-4" said Lampasas Tyler Junior College men's tennis player, and all-region player. "We are right there with them just got to get over some hurdles, and really get down and focus"

Being a young team this year has some advantages and disadvantages. Reasons like chemistry is a disadvantage because the team is trying to build it right now. As far as being young it gives the team some more athleticism. Coach Dash Connell shines some light on the situation and how he makes it work.

"This past week in our tournament really showed how young we are but it also showed the potential we have with our sophomore Lampasas being a good captain to look up to, and how he tells the freshmen what they need to do as if he were the coach." said Coach Connell.

With the score tied 4-4 it came down too Lampasas last match to try and save the team. Unfortunately it wasn't enough for the win against the #1 team in the nation, allowing it to become 5-4 in the end.

"I couldn't pull it off, I just looked at my coach with sorrow, but I had to remind myself that I am the captain, so I picked my head up" said Lampasas.

Losing too two top ranked teams in the nation leaves you with what if's in your head after that. Those what if's had Coach Connell realizing that it was the chemistry between his players that needed some work.

"After the loss it was heart breaking because I know this team has too much talent and too let chemistry try and stop it. I just wasn't having it, so I have them play with each other for about hour and a half everyday now" said Coach Connell.

"We previously played the #1-#2 team in the country losing to them both 5-4."

-Ciro Lampasas
Current player, Men's tennis

From practicing for only an hour the team now has an hour and a half of scrimmage and another hour of regular practice. Player Lampasas stays after practice even though practice is over with the loss he had, he doesn't want that feeling again.

"You know when you see a baby cry because they don't have their diaper changed or their hungry. Well i'm that baby and i'm not going to stop until I get that win against the 2 ranked teams in the nation" said Lampasas.

Having extra workouts, putting more focus into the team's chemistry Coach Connell is confident in his team for next week's matchup against Texas A&M University.

Men's basketball needs new coach

Column

A sports team has a certain window to win and be successful, no matter if the team is currently in a rebuilding year growing for the future or they are only a couple of games away from winning a championship, the line has to be drawn somewhere. No coach should be able to just coach without any type of consequence on his or her season. Which is exactly what is happening with the men's basketball coach, Mike Marquis. He has been the head coach at TJC for 15 years, yet has only managed to reach the national tournament one time. Now, if all that is wanted of a coach is to get some of his players to the next level, then coach Marquis is doing a fine job. But teams generally want to win games and bring home championships, something that has not happened for the men's basketball team.

Nick Vaughn

Given the amount of success at TJC with all the other sports teams, men's basketball should have no excuses. There have been countless players and assistant coaches to come through TJC, yet head coach Marquis has stayed through it all, despite losing seasons and subpar performances by players on the court. When your students of the campus have no faith in the team before the season even starts, not giving TJC a chance against certain schools on the schedule and when your own fan base does not believe, then something has to change. All the sports teams have access to the same resources as others, yet other teams seem to thrive while men's basketball program continues to struggle. And something needs to be done.

If over course of many years, one team isn't successful, the team may be to blame. But when nearly every team over the course of years isn't successful, who else can be to blame, if not the coach?

Softball has a near perfect season heading to nationals in second year

Benjamin Savallo
Staff Writer

Softball, being the unpredictable sport that it is, may have helped the TJC Apaches make history.

With the Regional Tournament finally here and the regular season coming to an abrupt end, TJC's softball team is not yet finished.

"It's fun. It's starting to get to the point where you're kind of amped up going into the regional tournament," said Head Coach Nicole Dickson.

TJC Apaches have been nothing short of successful in just their third season as a program. Flashback to this time last year and these ladies were getting ready to call it quits on their first eligible season. Last year, the team exceeded the expectations this program had for them. They went a healthy 39-18 overall but only 18-10 in conference play. They just missed the National Tournament and came in third in the region.

In their region, a team would have to finish in the top two to enter the tournament, and just behind Blinn and Navarro by two games last year, the lady Apaches fell just short of their goal. With all freshmen last year, there wasn't anyone on the team itself to take that leadership role that every team needs to be successful. But flash forward to the beginning of this season and it's a whole different story.

"We're really shooting to go; to finish top two and go to the National Tournament this year and I think we have the talent to do it," said Assistant Coach Audrey Farfan.

At the beginning of this season, TJC was nowhere to be found in the NJCAA D1 pre-season rankings and nobody outside the TJC organization really knew what to expect from this team. Now that they have that leadership they've been looking for in the form of seven returning sophomores, this team was ticking like a bomb waiting to explode into one of the more elite offensive teams in the nation.

The offense helped boost this Apache team to top rankings according to the NJCAA statistics website. Throughout the first 16 games this offense was first in home runs, RBI's, runs scored and became the second ranked team in the nation overall.

This team became the team to beat and it was starting to look as if it wouldn't be done. But then came a double header against Weatherford College to put a halt on the idea of a perfect season.

In the first game the defense gave up 11 runs to Weatherford, the most amount of runs TJC has ever seen from any opponent. But in the second game against Weatherford, TJC looked like they hadn't skipped a beat, came back stronger with a 7-1 win to finish up the series. Coach Dickson believes it was for the best, calling it a "reality check," that they needed to stay hungry. It seemed that giving up so many runs lit a fire under this defense. Now undefeated in conference with a 24-0 record and now ranked first overall in the nation, the defense seems impenetrable.

With the regional tournament in sight, they're looking to be the only team in their region to finish undefeated in conference. And since this team's defense is starting to pick up the pace alongside the offense, they're a shoe-in for the National Tournament.

TJC has now become the most dominant team in the nation because of the power shown on both sides of the field. With that being said, they had a near perfect season. Which means anything can happen in this sport we call softball.

The Apaches lost a game that, on paper, they should've won and won handedly at that. Slip-ups happen, and in the National Tournament all it takes is one to send a team home packing. But like Coach Dickson said, at the end of the day, it's the team that's the strongest mentally that will be left standing.

Move to the head of the class.

Megan Cumbee heads the new Rusk Promise Scholarship

Alexis Long
Staff Writer

Most students that are involved in a scholarship program know Megan Cumbee.

And chances are, she knows them too.

In fact, those who've spent any amount of time in the scholarship offices on the second floor of White Administrative building probably noticed her in her well-lit office, talking with a student or have heard the sound of her fingers swiftly tapping on her keyboard.

Cumbee is currently the coordinator for Scholarship Recruitment and Retention. She works with the Rusk Promise Scholarship and the Presidential Honors Scholarship.

Whether she's checking emails, going on a Starbucks run with her co-workers or making trips to Rusk, Cumbee always has the student's best interests at heart.

"The students that I work with are some incredibly talented people who are willing to push themselves to achieve their goals, and I am completely honored that I'm able to wake up every day to an awesome job," Cumbee said.

While attending Rusk High School, Cumbee was in the same boat as most people; She had no idea what she wanted to pursue after graduating.

That changed when she began East Texas Baptist University. Cumbee, following her passion for helping the people around her, began pursuing a degree in Communications.

After graduating from ETBU in 2012, a colleague advised her of a job opening in Admissions.

"It was like a weight had been lifted off of my shoulders, especially since I loved helping students with college issues," Cumbee said.

After working for ETBU for two years, Cumbee was promoted to Senior Admissions Counselor.

"I was so thrilled to be promoted because it really let me know that I had achieved the goals I set out for," Cumbee said.

But sometimes, we all miss being closer to home.

"I started looking for jobs closer to home after I didn't see myself growing there anymore," Cumbee said.

In June 2014, Cumbee was hired as the scholarship coordinator at TJC.

"The job was brand new on campus, and it was basically created to facilitate the Rusk Promise Program," Cumbee said.

Cumbee started working with students in the Presidential Honors Scholarship soon after.

Although Cumbee enjoys working with the Presidential Honors Scholarship, which is given to students who ranked in the top ten percent of their high school class at the completion of their junior year, she said the Rusk Promise Scholarship really helped boost her creativity.

"I am more of a 'Let me step in and take over what you have already created', but I had to use my creative side and really think outside of the box for the program since it was a brand new thing," Cumbee said.

The Rusk Promise Scholarship was established in February of 2014 and is one of only 23 Promise programs in the United States and the first such initiative in Texas.

The scholarship provides Rusk graduates with up to $4,000 per year for two years. Students must graduate in the top half of their class with a minimum of 2.5 GPA.

TJC student, Elizabeth Norman, said she didn't consider TJC at first.

"I didn't exactly know where I was going to go to college, but then I realized that I qualified for the scholarship and it really paved a great path for me," Norman said.

On top of the requirements to be eligible for the program, Cumbee requires monthly meetings with each student to make sure they are keeping up with their grades and stay on track.

"I'm incredibly grateful that she [Cumbee] is in charge of us because she really does care about every one of us and wants to see," Norman said. "And to be honest, I really don't want to let her down."

TJC hosts annual children's summer camps starting in June

Rachal Gilbert
Verve Editor

For over 30 years, Tyler Junior College has hosted a variety of summer camps for ages 4-18.

These camps go through the entire summer and run Monday through Friday. These family fun camps are lead by camp staff and cost $59 and up.

There are over 20 camps to choose from and offer everything from babysitting courses to high tech health career.

All camps are lead by paid adult staff and all high school sports camps are lead by TJC coaches.

If camper plans to be there all day, a supervised lunch option is offered and must be preregistered for. All camps must bring a healthy snack and drink every day and a swimsuit and towel if their course requires it.

Some camps are overnight camps and require campers to bring a set of twin bed sheets, a blanket, pillow, shower curtain towels and toiletries to stay in the TJC residence halls. Any campers who drove themselves will be required to turn in their keys upon arrival. Camps fill up very quickly and are approaching fast.

"This year the most popular camps are Cookies, Cupcakes and Games, LegoWeDo: Robotics for younger kids and Incredible Stuff," said OHPE director Heath Stoner.

Cookies, Cupcakes and Games and Archery are both already filled.

Camps start in early June and preregistration is required. Camps can be paid for over the phone at 903-510-2900, online www.tjc.edu/SummerCampsReg or in person at TJC West Campus.

Current and former students and colleagues all seem to agree that Tefteller is a friendly person who doesn't seek accolades. He simply loves to teach.

Department Chair and Professor of Mathematics, Chris Chappa said, "He is always willing to help students outside of class. If I walk by during his office hours, there's a student in there."

According to some, he is also a very snappy dresser and a stickler for the rules.

"He's very punctual. He's always able to get things done when they need to be done," said Chappa.

Floyd Starnes, Professor of Mathematics and Engineering recalls, "When I first started working here, no one told me the rules. The first day that I taught here, I didn't erase the board Starnes also said that Tefteller is a great tennis player and really loves the sport.

One of Tefteller's fondest memories was during a National Men's Tennis Tournament, he and his wife volunteered to be host family to the team from Dupage, Illinois. "Getting to know them, and them knowing me - we developed a friendship," he said.

His greatest accomplishment, he laughs and says will be making it to 50 years. He's worked for four different presidents, eight or ten deans and four to five department chairs, and he's gotten along with all of them.

Once retired, he plans to do volunteer work, travel and exercise more. He also plans to "drink more coffee with my friends," he said. He plans to retire once his 50th year is completed.

"As his colleague, he's gone out of his way to make sure I feel welcome and make sure I know what I need to know, and the things that I need to be a new faculty member."

Any student who joins the band will most likely receive a scholarship. Depending on what instrument spot the band needs to fill may determine who will get a scholarship first.

To keep a scholarship, students must make a C or above in all scholarship requirement classes. For non-music majors, students who would be in marching band class. If a music major, a C or above in all music major courses is required. This in addition to maintaining a 2.0 GPA.

The Apache Band hasn't gone on any recent trips. However in the past they have taken many. Some of the places visited by the band include Paris, Japan and Hawaii. There might be an upcoming trip next spring according to the director, Jeremy Strickland.

Here, Kitty, Kitty Keanu: Key and Peele's low-key comedy

Movie Review

Going into the theater, I was anticipating Keanu to be the most obnoxious pile of sexual jokes and annoyingly timed slaps, but I was pleasantly corrected.

Knowing Key and Peele's style, the fact that this wasn't a mindless comedy actually impressed my typically serious movie preferences. But it was still a comedy, nonetheless.

This film is an example of what I wish more comedies would begin to look like. It had plenty of raunchy sexual and racial jokes, but it didn't seem like they were inserted (hehe) into the storyline just for the hell of it. In a lot of cases, it felt like they were jokes and comments that would simply show up in normal conversation. Of course, there were still a few over-the-top jokes, but not as many as would be expected for a film of this era.

The acting was where it got a little choppy. When they were acting "normal," they actually were very convincing and realistic. But whenever they were trying to "fit in" (those who see the movie will know what I mean) it got kind of stupid. If you're going to make a film with very convincing, realistic acting, you should and can keep the acting (even if it isn't the character's natural role) consistently realistic. Realistic and funny aren't inherently opposites. But this movie assumed that any funny moments needed to be accompanied by rather juxtaposition acting.

The storyline was sadly the most ridiculous aspect of this film. To summarize: one scene involved three gangs shooting each other over a cat... That's about all you need to know.

To conclude, although there was an obnoxious plot and iffy acting, I was actually happy I watched this film.

I'd like to thank Times Square Cinema for making this review possible. When you come to the ticket counter, tell the clerk that you are part of a kitty smuggling gang, watching the movie for "research."

Accidente en una via de intersección en TJC; ¿De quién es la culpa?

En Abril 22, un estudiante de Tyler Junior College fue golpeado por un automóvil mientras cruzada la avenida S. Mahon y la calle E. Lake.

Justo 9:04 A.M, el día 22 de Abril, Elizabeth Marie Spiva de 22 años y estudiante de TJC conducía su automóvil de marca Suzuki, a la curva e intersección de calle E. Lake a la avenida S. Mahon, al frente del edificio Pirtle Technology.

Según los reportes policiacos, el brillo de sol obstaculizo la visibilidad de Spiva quien término golpeando a Cailin Chapman Jense de 19 años, otro estudiante de TJC.

"Me alegro de que no hubieran heridos graves."

Jefe de policía, Tyler junior College

Por otro lado, Jense quien venía caminando por la calzada este de la avenida S. Mahon en dirección al sur, el decidió pasar hacia la otra calzada, sin embargo, según el reporte oficial de la policía, Jense no cedió el paso al automóvil de Spiva quien termino golpeándolo.

Mas tarde, Jense fue trasladado al Centro

Medico del Este de Texas (East Texas Medical Center). "Me alegro de que no hubieran herido graves" dijo el jefe de la policía del campus de TJC, Randy Melton, "sin embargo esto se puede evitar si se presta mas atención."

"No hay ninguna señal de pare en esta intersección."

Este es un punto concurrido en el campus de Tyler Junior College no solo por estudiantes quienes se dirigen a tomar clases al edificio de Pirtle Technology o quienes vienen a comer a Subway; sino también, esta curva es la entrada a los parqueaderos de la facultad y muy cerca se encuentra la zona frecuentada por fumadores.

"No hay ninguna señal de pare en esta intersección, el tráfico en dirección este por la calle Lake debe tomar a la izquierda, en dirección norte, girando en esta intersección," información proveída por Texas Peace Officer's Crash Report, "no hay marcación de cruce peatonal en esta intersección."

"La señales de tránsito son reguladas por la ciudad de Tyler, y no por el Tyler Junior College, ya que estas son parte de las vías publicas" dijo el policía Melton.

Algunas de las recomendaciones que ofreció Melton a la comunidad de TJC es la debida atención a la hora de cruzar la calle mirando hacia los dos costados.

"Mientras la cabeza de los estudiantes se encuentra abajo, ellos no prestan atención y no comprueban antes de cruzar la calle."

De igual manera, los conductores tienen que reducir la velocidad al transitar por el campus y prestar atención a su entorno con el objetivo de evitar accidentes.

Car that hit student in front of Pirtle had the right of way

At exactly 9:04 a.m. on Apr. 22, TJC student, Elizabeth Marie Spiva, age 22 was a driver involved in a vehicle vs pedestrian accident with another TJC student, at the curve and intersection between E. Lake Street and S. Mahon Avenue, in front of the Pirtle Technology building. According to police reports, the sunlight hampered Spiva's visibility who ended up hitting Cailin Chapman Jense, age 19.

Jense, who was walking along the east walkway of S. Mahon Avenue heading south, decided to go to the other carriageway, however, according to the official police report, Jense did not give way to Spiva's car, resulting in the accident. Later, Jense was taken to the East Texas Medical Center.

"I'm glad that they weren't seriously hurt, but these things are avoidable. This can be prevented if you pay attention," said the head of campus police, Randy Melton.

The spot is a busy area on campus not only for students who take classes at the Pirtle Technology building or those who eat at Subway; it is a designated smoking area and close to some of the tennis courts.

"There is no stop sign at this inter-

Crash Report. "There is no marked cross walk at this intersection."

"The street signs are regulated by the city of Tyler, and not Tyler Junior college since these are public streets," said Melton.

According to Melton, there are many who have the misconception that pedestrians always have the right of way,

"It goes down to the drivers, they need to slow down and pay attention to their surroundings."

- Chief Randy Melton
Director of Campus Police, Tyler Junior College

however, if they are not on a crosswalk, it is not necessarily the case.

The main pattern of accidents between pedestrians and cars is due to the lack of attention of those who travel around and on roads of the TJC campus. In this case, the pedestrian is at fault.

Some of the recommendations offered by Melton to the TJC community are to pay attention when crossing the street, looking both ways. Similarly, drivers must slow down around campus and pay attention to their environment in order to avoid accidents.

In case of emergency, contact the police station at 903-510-2222. For non-emergency information, call 903-510-2258.

water for over 15 hours at that point.

"I thought about an important meeting I had to fly to on Monday. A voice mocked me, telling me that I didn't need to worry about the meeting because I'd be dead," said Metke. "I started repeating 'Donna, Jennifer, John' — we had a five-year-old son as well — over and over during the night to block the voices and focus my thinking."

After that long in open sea, the chances of survival were slim.

"In addition, a shark fishing tournament was going on nearby. The searchers in private planes had sighted so many sharks that one of them said it looked as if I could have walked to shore on their backs. People on shore believed it unlikely my body would ever be found," said Metke.

In the early morning hours of the next day, which happened to be Father's Day, while on top of a big wave, he spotted shore and was sure what he was seeing was real this time.

"The heat of the sun cleared my thinking. My spirits lifted and I told myself I'd find a way to survive," said Metke.

Working against the tide and currents, he made slow progress and it took 10 more hours. Finally, after swimming 43 miles and spending 28 hours in the water, Metke crawled out of the ocean and collapsed on the warm sand. A fisherman named Roy Guerra found him.

When Donna and Jennifer landed in Houston, Metke had been missing for over 30 hours. The attendant at the airport got word to them that a body had been recovered. In the confusion, one vital detail was lost: the fact that he was still alive. Donna and Jennifer went to the chapel in the airport seeking some comfort.

"So when I finally made shore, Roy took me to a coastguard station. They wanted to helicopter me out and I didn't want to go to a hospital, I just wanted to go home," said Metke. "So I told them, to take me to the nearest Whataburger, my favorite place, and I'll have somebody pick me up."

In the days and weeks that followed, people around the world read about his unlikely survival in publications from USA Today to the National Enquirer and sent him notes and letters. He recovered quickly but the prolonged exposure made him dread getting cold. For several years, he would shake uncontrollably if he got even a slight chill, but that went away eventually.

"I've never had any flashbacks or bad dreams, and I've never forgotten how fortunate I am," said Metke. "I don't believe that my experience changed much about who I am, but it did make me more conscious of how I spend my time. Maybe some of us need a reminder that life is fragile and doesn't last forever, to help us enjoy and appreciate how glorious it is."

METKE LESSONS

Lesson #1 Life is brief and time is fleeting. How I spend my time can either enrich or impoverish my life. I went back and got a doctorate, changed jobs, helped start South Texas College and then moved across the country to do what I can to help a good college called Lake Washington Technical College become a great one.

Lesson #2 My family is first forever. In the water, I was so cold, numb, tired and irrational that I wanted to let go. Repeating the names of my family gave me focus and strength. When I've had to push issues that are important to my college and its students and persevere through the criticism of others, I have drawn strength from my family.

Lesson #3 My mind grows by what it feeds on. TV, video games and office gossip may be entertaining as you drift through life, but there are better experiences to be had. The shared adventures our family has had have brought us very close. We've explored the major ruins in Mexico, Guatemala and Peru, gone diving along the Yucatan coast, Palau and the Galapagos, and climbed mountains here and on other continents. We are continually planning new trips and our grown children still want to join us. We talk to our daughter and grandchildren every day, and our son, who is on the other side of the world, calls or e-mails almost as often.

Lesson #4 Take time to enjoy, celebrate and cherish the extra time you have and treat each day as the special gift that it is. Jennifer asked me whether I often think about that Father's Day. The truth is that I seldom think about the events of that weekend, but I often think about all the wonderful things that have happened since. It scares me that I nearly missed the best years of my life. I almost missed my daughter's marriage, the birth of two perfect grandsons, the bond that's developed between my son and me as adults, the rediscovered closeness with my family and all the adventures and new friends my wife and I have discovered in this incredible part of the country.

Lesson #5 Don't be afraid to grow old. As a young adult, my favorite poet was Robert Browning who said "Come grow old along with me, the best is yet to be." I am forever thankful that I have been able to experience the joys of growing older and validate that these years are indeed the best. The time spent with my wife and our adult children as well as with family and friends is priceless, but the most fun is introducing our grandchildren to my favorite activities. The most rewarding title I know is "Grandpa" and being proclaimed your grandson's favorite super hero is the best of all. I spent two days in Texas last week with Grandson Adam and taught him how to ride a scooter. He called me twice today to report how far he can go on it and to tell me that he is learning to swim. We don't all get to grow old and most of us don't get a second chance at life. These days I'm trying to do things right the first time.

playing y'all's six games?' And I said yes sir, and he said 'all right y'all are good to go,'" said Wooten.

"The assistant coach in this gym[OHPE] was on his phone the whole time," said Decorian Grayson, freshman tryout attendee.

Though head coach Mike Marquis believes that he is doing these kids a favor and helping them reach their goal by having this redshirt class and an annual tryout, the only one benefiting from all of this is the bank account of the men's basketball program.

"We're trying to help as many kids as we can. Most colleges want to have a tryout they only have for their self. But I know we can't help all the kids that want to go on and play, so I started for years now, to have invited kids, and now a lot of times the schools that were here will invite their kids and I already know that's happened out of this tryout-schools have invited me to come their to tryouts," said head coach Mike Marquis.

Though head coach Marquis believes that his program is doing the local kids good by holding subpar tryouts and a redshirt class, the coach is not showing the kids the light of day after the first couple of weeks.

"I felt it was a scam and a waste of time. They were just looking for money," said Grayson.

"In the beginning, he taught us stuff, then close to the end it was just like you come into a pick-up game. You come or not he(coach Edwards) would be on his phone," said Darnelle Odom freshman former redshirt player.

With the current team in flux this upcoming off-season, coming off yet another poor year under head coach Marquis, one would think that the team would be more open to the redshirt program. Its promises, however, fall short.
